- Whatever other elements of somatic influence that have effected you

- Personal growth, therapeutic and healing experiences—those significant practices, interventions, process experiences and the ensuing personal changes
- Spiritual practice, if any, and the meaning this has in your life
- Mention what you consider to be your strengths, your weaknesses and what has been the greatest challenge in your life. State the present focus of your personal growth

Statement of Educational and Professional Goals

Include a one to two page statement on how you have come to be interested in the field of clinical, prenatal and perinatal psychology or somatic psychology, and how your personal and professional experiences have contributed to and shaped that interest. Also include current professional goals, why you are interested in attending SBGI, the professional strengths you bring to graduate study, and the areas in which you would like to expand your understanding and expertise.

All essays should be typewritten and double-spaced.

Santa Barbara Graduate Institute

Nurturing the innate wisdom of the whole person

Dear Recommender,

You are being asked to write a letter of recommendation as well as to complete the attached form for an applicant to Santa Barbara Graduate Institute. Please allow me this opportunity to introduce SBGI.

Santa Barbara Graduate Institute offers graduate degree programs in clinical psychology and in the dynamic emerging fields: prenatal and perinatal psychology and somatic psychology.

Prenatal and perinatal psychology reveals that our earliest experiences of life profoundly shape the core blueprint of our being—genetically, physically, emotionally, mentally, and spiritually. This perspective can become a primary specialty as well as add tremendous depth to a wide array of healing arts, education and other professional work.

Somatic psychology is the study of experiential, body-inclusive psychology and the latest advances in psychological, developmental, and somatic practice and knowledge. With a focus on the integration of body, soul and self, the goal is to prepare students to be effective therapists and educators who are knowledgeable in both conventional psychotherapeutic modalities and body-oriented approaches to psychotherapy.

Each degree program offers in-depth theory and application of the specialty, experiential core learning, as well as important counseling and therapeutic skills within a humanistic/transpersonal framework. We invite leading-edge researchers and clinicians from all over the country to serve as faculty, mentors and personal advisors to students in their areas of concentration. Our educational community gathers monthly in beautiful Santa Barbara where adult learners are an honored part of the teaching-learning community, and learning is experiential, appropriately challenging, and personally relevant.

Santa Barbara Graduate Institute's philosophy of synergistic education seeks to answer the call for an innovative education and research model. At the heart of synergistic education is the experience of the whole as greater than the sum of its parts. This synergy creates something beyond that which can be accessed by any singular piece alone. SBGI's synergistic education philosophy values the integration of personal and professional experience with academic knowledge and research; multiple ways of knowing, learning, and healing; and the unique contribution of every participant interacting together to create a synergistic and nurturing educational community.
